

Eligible Programs of Study

IAM and partner scholarships are intended to support a wide range of learning pathways. We recognize that education can take many forms and may change over time. Applicants are welcome to apply for funding for full-time, part-time, in-person, online, or hybrid programs.

Eligible programs and learning opportunities include, but are not limited to:

- High school equivalency or upgrading programs: including adult education, GED-equivalent programs, academic upgrading, or credit completion.
- College or community college programs: including diplomas, applied programs, continuing education, and post-secondary certificates.
- Vocational, trade, or technical programs: including apprenticeships, skilled trades training, hands-on technical training, and industry-recognized credentials.
- University programs: Bachelor's, Master's, or Doctoral degree programs.
- Certificate, micro-credential, or short-term training programs: including non-degree programs, professional certifications, skills-based courses, and workforce development programs.
- Other education or training opportunities

If your program does not fit neatly into the categories above, please describe it in your application. We encourage you to apply if the program supports your learning goals, recovery, and future plans.

We recognize that learning may occur through academic programs, trades training, cultural teachings, language revitalization, community leadership development, land-based learning, and other educational pathways.

Important note: The program you are applying for does not need to follow a traditional or linear educational path. What matters most is how the learning opportunity supports your personal growth, recovery, and goals at this time.

We recognize that learning may occur through academic programs, trades training, cultural teachings, language revitalization, community leadership development, land-based learning, and other educational pathways.
